Question 4 of 5

Question 4:

Person A:

I used to fly to Italy every summer for my wine trade, where I enjoyed relaxing while traveling and tasting some of the finest wines. For me, visiting vineyards and connecting with local producers was not just about business; it was a chance to unwind and appreciate the beautiful landscapes. My travels allowed me to immerse myself in different cultures, making my work even more fulfilling.

Person B:

People find it strange that I dislike flying, especially as a travel blogger who frequently needs to fly for my work. Despite the excitement of discovering new destinations, I think that flying is a bad experience overall, with long security lines and cramped seats. I often share tips with my followers about finding alternative travel options, like road trips, that allow for more enjoyable and flexible adventures.

Person C:

Personally, I have mixed feelings about flying. While I want to work as a tour guide in other countries to share my love for travel with others, I also dread the uncomfortable experience of air travel. I even suggest increasing the flight ticket price to reduce the number of flights, making travel a more thoughtful experience that allows people to appreciate their journeys.

Person D:

My son and his family live far from me, so I visit relatives regularly by plane. I know this is harmful to the environment, but there are other things that I do in order to protect our nature. I usually walk or cycle to local grocery stores instead of driving, and I limit my use of plastic as much as possible. I believe that small actions like these contribute to a healthier planet and set a good example for my family.
